Paying off debt should be your top priority

Find right people to help structure your finances

This topic has been discussed so many times yet many people are still swimming in debt, making debt one of the biggest problems the country faces.

There are various educational material to help people get out of debt. When young people start working, what is the first thing they tend to do?

They get a loan to fix their parents' home or they get a credit card to buy clothes for their new jobs. Is there something wrong with fixing your parents' home? No.

But the problem is the loan you took that might end up affecting you by getting you into a financial crisis if you do not pay according to the agreement entered into with the creditor.

Remember, getting a loan seems like an easy way out but that loan you took has interest, meaning a borrower ends up paying more than what you initially borrowed.

Would you have planned for this? All this happens because most people do not have discipline and cannot manage their finances.

When you know that you cannot discipline yourself, ask for help.

You can start by getting your HR consultant to help you set up a deduction of a certain amount from your salary prior to paying you. Keep that portion for at least 12 months or consult a financial advisor to guide you.

Do not let debt control your life; ask for help when you can't handle your finances:

- Stop borrowing money;
 - Create a debt pay-off strategy that will compliment your budget. List all your debts from lowest to highest balances; pay off debts that have the lowest balances first. That will provide immediate reward and you will be motivated to continue settling other debts;
 - Pay more than the minimum repayments by starting with the ones with the lowest balance;
 - Consolidate your debt with your bank if possible; and
 - If you get excess cash, put that money towards your debt pay-off plan.
